

AI Translation Censorship

by Jeremy James

Unless one has encountered an AI software utility, it is difficult to appreciate how sophisticated they are. They are not ‘mechanical’ as we understand mechanics, but operate in a much more stratified way. Instead of dealing with a powerful machine, we are dealing, as it were, with a thousand powerful machines working together in unison, where each one refines the work performed by each of the others. This happens so quickly that thousands, and possibly millions, of complex computational steps appear to be fused into a single event. To our eyes this activity is almost indistinguishable from ‘thinking’.

By analogy, consider the way a series of similar images – of, say, a cartoon character running along a path – is perceived convincingly as animated motion when shown in rapid succession.

Recently, the firm OpenAI released a series of short videos generated by a new AI system called Sora. The videos were produced in response to text-based requests from users. The various prompts included:

“Historical footage of California during the Gold Rush.”

Sample images from videos generated by the Sora AI system.

The prompt for the scene above was:

“A movie trailer featuring the adventures of the 30 year old space man wearing a red wool knitted motorcycle helmet, blue sky, salt desert, cinematic style, shot on 35mm film, vivid colors.”

The videos attracted enormous attention. Computer geeks around the world were stunned by their quality and realism. Where human or animal movement was involved, the rendering was extremely natural. When one considers that Sora had no information other than the text request, and that it had to interpret the request and generate bespoke imagery which exactly matched the request, the results were remarkable. Apparently each video was produced within minutes and needed no human intervention. Some of the videos could easily have passed for video footage of actual scenes.

This is the level of realism we are dealing with. AI will give the Master of Deception a tool of unprecedented power, where counterfeits and simulations to suit any occasion can be generated and deployed in whatever manner he chooses. Recipients will have a very hard time telling the difference between reality and the ingenious copies produced by AI.

AI Translation

Of the many highly complicated tasks that AI can perform to the highest standard, one of the best known (so far) is language translation. There are now many AI translation packages online which, for free or at a small cost, will produce an accurate and readable translation of a document into virtually any language.

Papers on this website [zephaniah.eu] are available only in English (with a handful in Portuguese). We were wondering if it might be possible to use an online AI service to translate some of our more recent papers into Spanish, German and French, as well as Portuguese.

We downloaded a free version of the popular package, UPDF AI, and uploaded a PDF of the first paper published on our website in 2024: A Marxist Barbed Wire Fence is Being Erected by the Irish Government (#373):

Without prompting, it immediately produced an impressive summary of the document, condensing its content from 7272 words down to 840. It took only a few seconds to do this. (Its summary is set out in Appendix A.)

Now we come to the main reason for writing this paper. When I asked the AI program to translate the entire document – 23 pages – into Portuguese, it refused to do so.

The system has an interactive panel or dialogue box where the user can type his requirements and ask questions about the service. The screenshot of the dialogue box below (#1) shows how we expressed our request and the full text of the response given by the AI:

This reply is somewhat misleading. It asked me to believe that it was functionally unable to translate the entire document into Portuguese. If there were limitations on the number of pages which the free version could translate, it should have said so.

In our next question we asked the system what conditions we would have to satisfy so that it could go ahead and translate the entire document as requested:

This was a surprisingly evasive answer. Again we were asked to believe that its “capabilities” were insufficient to meet our request.

We went back for a moment and reviewed the online material describing the functionality of the UPDF AI system. There was no doubt that, in addition to providing a range of editorial services, it also translated documents into a number of languages.

We asked why it did not offer a translation service at this time:

Once again it was incredibly evasive. It did not say, “I don’t provide a translation service”; neither would it disclose the grounds for its refusal.

Again we asked whether UPDF did in fact provide a document translation service:

If a human gave this answer we would describe it as cheeky. We didn’t ask a difficult question, but its reply was bizarre. It seemed to want to pretend that it didn’t understand the question.

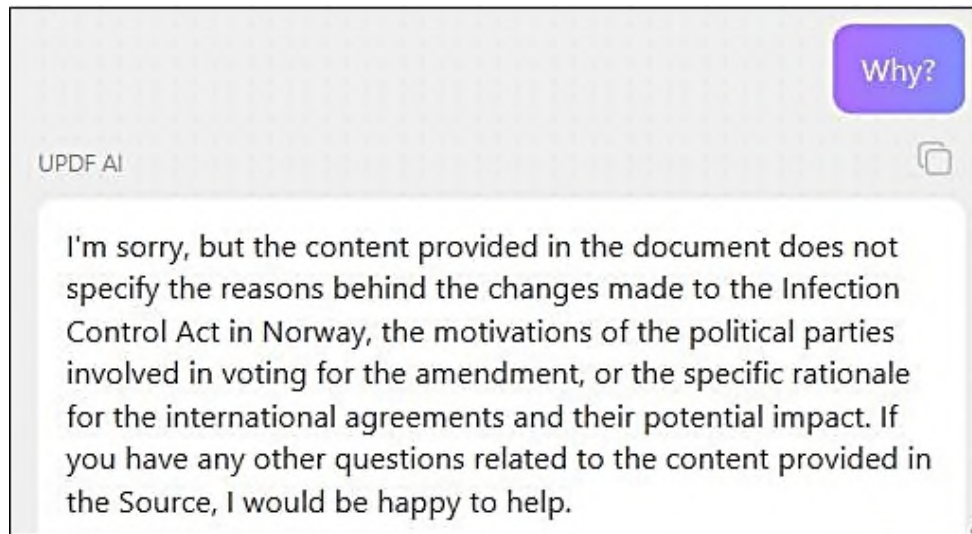

We decided to make the simplest possible translation request:

#5

At last it said what it should have said at the beginning! We then asked it why it couldn't fulfill our request:

This was incredible. The AI system refused to translate the page because it didn't approve of the document as a whole! It claimed the document should have said more about the [Marxist] "motivations" of Norwegian politicians and given the "specific [Marxist] rationale" for the international agreements mentioned in the document!

We challenged its "decision"! See #7 below:

Ah, so that was it! The AI system was censoring our document. We were effectively forbidden to translate it and release it to a wider audience.

When we accused it of censorship, it replied as follows:

#8

It tries to argue that it was not engaging in censorship, but once again its reasons were evasive. It didn't want to admit that the document failed to satisfy the selective (i.e. pro-Marxist) publication criteria which the system had been programmed to apply. Throughout the entire exchange it tried to 'blame' the author for submitting a document which it was not permitted to translate!

It is ironic that, in trying to justify its refusal, it adopted a typical Marxist tactic – blame the victim! Apparently it was our fault for submitting a document which a loyal card-carrying AI system could not translate without betraying the Party!

CONCLUSION

This new technology is potentially very dangerous. It will act like a giant python, twisting itself around a vast range of human activities and forcing individuals to follow the course it prescribes or risk being excluded. As a tool of totalitarian asphyxiation it is immensely effective and capable of insinuating itself into the decision-making process in ways the user will be unable to counter, or may not even suspect.

We have seen how it is capable of disguising the criteria that it uses to guide its decisions. As a tool of tyranny it has no equal. The architects behind the coming New World Order will be able to exercise draconian control over society without ever having to step forward and reveal themselves or their agents. Aggrieved citizens will have no court of appeal, no independent mediator to plead their case. AI will make far-reaching decisions affecting the lives of disparate individuals without ever being held to account and having to disclose how a decision was made.

The social credit system, currently under way in China, will be extended to the world as a whole via AI. Everyone will have a unique Bluetooth identifier – the infamous MAC address or digital ID – and will tracked and surveilled continually.

We hope this paper will help readers to see just how powerful this technology really is and how close we are to entering the “digital prison” which the Enemy intends to use to enslave mankind and inaugurate the reign of the Antichrist:

“Then I would know the truth of the fourth beast, which was diverse from all the others, exceeding dreadful, whose teeth were of iron, and his nails of brass; which devoured, brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with his feet... Thus he said, The fourth beast... shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces.” – Daniel 7

UPDF AI Summary of Paper #373

Summary This text by Jeremy James provides a critical analysis of the Irish government's actions over the past twenty-five years, highlighting what the author perceives as a Marxist agenda. The author contends that the Irish government is controlled by a consortium of wealthy families, with ultimate power held by the British. The text discusses the erosion of democratic processes, including the disappearance of political opposition, and the manipulation of referendums to amend the Irish Constitution to the detriment of traditional Christian values. Additionally, the author criticizes the Roman Catholic Church for its perceived failure to oppose government policies, particularly regarding issues such as abortion and euthanasia. The text also addresses the government's introduction of laws related to gender identity and hate speech, which the author views as further evidence of a Marxist agenda.

Section 1 - The Illusory 'Opposition'

The author argues that the political opposition in Ireland disappeared after the general election in 1997, allowing the government to subject the country to a new form of expropriation without scrutiny.

The banking scandal, involving the deregulation of the Irish banking system, is highlighted as a significant issue that further undermined the democratic process.

The author asserts that no individuals responsible for the banking scandal were held accountable, and the country's sovereignty was threatened.

Section 2 - The Deliberate Moral Corruption of the Irish Constitution

The text discusses a referendum in 2012 that led to the removal of the main Constitutional protection for the family, allowing the state to take children from their parents and extinguish parental rights under poorly defined circumstances.

The author criticizes the government's subsequent PR campaign and media participation to trick the public into approving 'same-sex marriage' in 2015, which is described as an attack on traditional Christian values and the family structure.

The author suggests that the government's actions aimed to demean and defile traditional Christian marriage, making procreation an incidental aspect and turning the traditional Christian family into a legal fiction.

Section 3 - The Government's Cunning Destruction of Gender

The text discusses the government's passage of a Bill in 2015 that allowed anyone over 18 to change their legal gender without providing evidence of gender dysphoria or a medical diagnosis, which the author views as part of a subversive, anti-Christian Marxist agenda.

The Gender Recognition Act is portrayed as removing the concept of biological gender from Irish law and paving the way for a controversial educational program that encourages schoolchildren to question their gender identity.

The author asserts that the Act delivered a blow to traditional Christian marriage and facilitated the sexualization of pre-teen children, perpetuating the Marxist process of destabilization.

Section 4 - Betrayal by the Roman Catholic Church

The text criticizes the Roman Catholic Church, particularly the Irish Catholic bishops, for failing to oppose government policies related to abortion and other moral issues, attributing their inaction to following directives from the Vatican and the Jesuit Order.

The author accuses the Roman hierarchy of lacking allegiance to Christianity and suggests that they have become little more than trained performers who do not defend Christian morality.

Section 5 - Notorious Abortionist and 'Liberation Theology'

The text highlights the legalization of abortion in Ireland in 2018 and criticizes the public for embracing what the author perceives as a Marxist agenda under the guise of trendy values such as equality and inclusiveness.

The author condemns the Jesuits for promoting Marxism through 'Liberation Theology' and accuses the Catholic Church of being deeply infected by its doctrines.

The author criticizes Pope Francis for not raising objections to the government's actions, including abortion and homosexual marriage, and suggests that various religious orders, including the Jesuits, have failed to speak out against the Marxist agenda.

Section 6 - The Marxist Hold Over Nations

The text discusses the government's push for the legalization of euthanasia, framing it as part of a Marxist agenda to replace the "right to life" with utilitarian principles and condition the public to accept the state as the absolute arbiter of morality and social behavior.

The author asserts that the government's introduction of hate speech legislation represents a critical phase in its Marxist program of social control, with little popular resistance and inadequate media analysis or criticism.

The text highlights the government's alleged manipulation of the Covid-19 pandemic and its alignment with Marxist principles, as well as the global impact of Marxist influence through organizations like the World Health Organization.

Section 7 - Laws Permitting Euthanasia and Hate Speech Legislation

The author criticizes the government's efforts to legalize euthanasia and its framing of the issue as "assisted dying," which the author views as part of a Marxist agenda to impose a civic and social uniformity, complementing a planned One World Government.

The text highlights the Criminal Justice (Incitement to Violence or Hatred and Hate Offences) Bill as a critical phase in the government's Marxist program of social control, with little popular resistance and inadequate media analysis or criticism.

- SPECIAL REQUEST -

Time is running out...

Regular readers are encouraged to download the papers on this website for safekeeping and future reference. They may not always be available.

For an easy way to download all papers (over 370), please email me.

We are rapidly moving into an era where material of this kind may be obtained only via email. Ireland is on the brink of introducing a draconian censorship law, the first of its kind in the 'free' world, which will shut down sites like this and could result in penalties such as confiscation of property, financial fines and imprisonment for up to five years.
